Central Park West

About the food: This new Japanese spot, which shares kitchen facilities with the Chinese Ivy's Cafe, Surpasses the other neighborhood sushi spots in quality, price, and presentation. In fact, when Chinese president Jiang Zemin and 130 of his associates checked into the Waldorf-Astoria last summer, Ivy/O-I-Shi-I delivered their meals to the hotel-3,900 in all-for ten days straight. "I personally only sleep half-hour for ten days," says owner Ivy Lin. They do a mean beef negimaki here; the sushi arrives fresh; the banana filled with red beans and fried with honey flour is amazing. And O-I-Shi-I honors special requests from both the Japanese and the Chinese menus.

THE NEW YORK TIMES

January 28, 2001 by Williams Niederkorn

Ivy's Cafe supplied all the Chinese and Japanese cuisine for back-to-back visits by President Jiang Zemin and the parliamentary leader Li Peng; a total of 3,900 meals... No catering jobs, Ms. Lin says now, will be too big.

Something of a "best-kept secret" on the upper West Side, this affordable "mix 'n' match" Asian "pleases all palates" with both Japanese and Chinese offerings. Some say the "nothing-to-look-at" decor proves you "can't judge a book by its cover", but aesthetes still find it "best for takeout".

THE WEST SIDER SPIRIT

September 28, 2001 by Tom Steele

It's quite pleasant to dine in the restaurant, unlike most take-out in the area...

TIME OUT NEW YORK

OCT 25-NOV 1, 2001 15

Something that makes them memorable. Small steamed buns, a Shanghai mainstay, are unusually flavorful and light. The Lotus Delight lives up to its moniker with sliced lotus, black mushrooms and other veggies artistically served on a bed of star-shaped fried tofu. Even more beautiful are the spicy Red Rose Scallops, cooked with seaweed and arranged in the shape of a fish. If you want to eat what Jiang ate, try prawns in minced garlic or sour cabbage with bean sprouts-plus, you can choose from a fair amount of Japanese food (and Jiang's favorite dish, by the way, was reportedly sushi).
